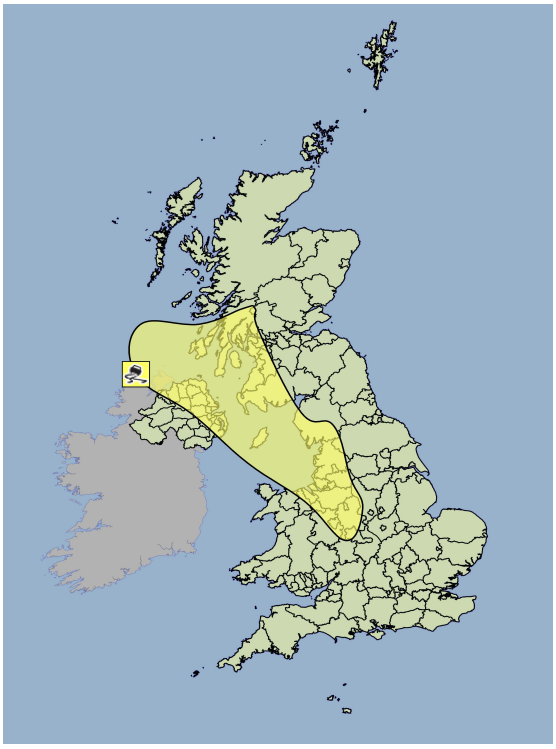
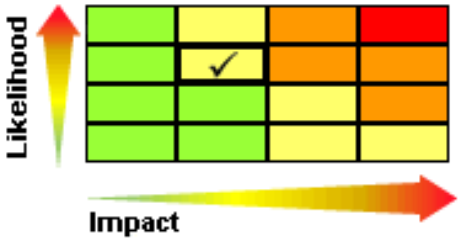
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Cold air and wintry showers are being pulled in from the north following the strong winds and rain on Thursday morning. These showers will help keep the road network wet in places through the areas highlighted, and with the cold air, temperatures will fall off quickly on Thursday evening, particularly in SW Scotland.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 15:00 on Thu, 05th Dec 2013 until 12:00 on Fri, 06th Dec 2013

Ice is expected to form from late Thursday afternoon with temperatures across the road network likely to fall below freezing, particularly across parts of SW Scotland. Elsewhere within the warning area icy stretches are likely depending on the distribution of cloud breaks. A mixture of rain, sleet and snow showers will continue through these areas into Friday morning, the snow mainly over SW Scotland and higher ground where some small accumulations are possible.

The public should be aware of difficult driving conditions with potential disruption to travel.
